BOBOTEMP

Before You Print

A few short sittings, with a grown-up

YOU WILL NEED

- A washable, non-toxic ink pad or finger paint labelled safe for children's skin, spread thin on a paper plate
- Two or three colors for petals and one for centers
- Wipes, a damp cloth and a towel; newspaper under the page
- No fingerprints? Round sticker dots or crayon dots fill the petals too

MAKING THE FLOWERS

- 1 ONE FINGERTIP, ONE PETAL
Press a fingertip lightly onto the pad or paint, then onto one dashed oval. Re-ink every one or two prints.
- 2 TURN THE PAPER, NOT THE FINGER
Rotate the page so each petal points out from the center dot.
- 3 CENTERS LAST
Use a different finger for the center, in another color.
- 4 LET IT DRY
Dry flat until completely dry — it depends on the ink and how thick the prints are — before adding names or words.
- 5 LITTLE ONES
Forty-two prints is a lot for a three-year-old: do one or two flowers a sitting and come back to it.
- 6 MAKE IT THEIRS
Add a ladybug, a sun or extra leaves with a marker. The dashed ovals disappear under the prints.

SAFETY

Use only washable, non-toxic ink or finger paint labelled safe for children's skin, with a grown-up watching. Keep it away from faces and mouths, wipe fingers between colors, wash hands with soap and water straight after, and let a child who dislikes the feel use sticker dots instead.

A Bunch of Thanks

One child · Seven stems tied with a ribbon. Print five petals around each dot, then a contrasting center.
